

PLANS FOR REINTEGRATION OF MUSIC SERVICE INTO NORFOLK EDUCATIONAL SETTINGS

Introduction

The latest DfE guidance detailing the measures to be taken to ensure the safe reopening of schools in September states that peripatetic teachers can resume teaching in September 2020:

As pupils return to the classroom, music will have a vital role to play. Schools are developing recovery curriculums, planning ways to make up for the time lost to the Coronavirus crisis and thinking of ways to help students process the upset that many will have experienced. It has become clear that in this transition period, music will be a valuable tool when placed at the heart of schools.

This document, which is aligned to the latest DfE guidance, is intended to support the continuation of music making in school settings, both instrumental and 'whole-class' and to ensure the smooth transition of tuition from online platforms back into the school environment, where appropriate, with support for schools and parents.

Music-making will enable students to rekindle friendships and have a positive impact on mental health and well-being through rebuilding verbal and non-verbal communication skills, problem solving, self-confidence, team-work, self-esteem and general togetherness with their peers through the medium of music alongside developing their general musicianship skills. By learning through 'doing', children will develop their skillsets and higher order learning through a non-pressurised process and learning environment, naturally utilising the skills needed to work together to improve their own and each other's efforts.

Area for concern	Response
Can peripatetic music tutors resume face-to-face instrumental tuition in September 2020?	Yes – they should minimise contact, ensure good room ventilation, maintain social distancing from other staff members and comply with the school's arrangements for managing and minimising risk. In order not to cross-contaminate established bubbles, only individual tuition will be offered during Autumn 2020, or group tuition for pupils from within the same bubble. Small groups from different bubbles may be taught safely by adopting social distancing measures only at the discretion of each individual setting as deemed appropriate.
Can peripatetic music tutors resume face-to-face whole class instrumental teaching in September 2020?	Yes – a flexible approach has been implemented from September 2020 to reduce potential risks.
Can instruments and resources be shared across classes or bubbles?	Yes – however, resources that are shared between classes or bubbles, such as music resources should be cleaned frequently and meticulously and always

(cont.)	between bubbles, or rotated to allow them to be left unused and out of reach for a period of 48 hours (72 hours for plastics) between use by different bubbles.
Can peripatetic music tutors resume singing, wind and brass playing?	Adapted lesson ideas and digital material have been implemented from September 2020 to remove the risk of shared instruments through body percussion and other rhythmic ideas. Yes – by positioning pupils back-to-back or side-to-side, avoiding sharing of instruments, and ensuring good ventilation. Schools should note that there may be an additional risk of infection in environments where you or others are singing, chanting, playing wind or brass instruments or shouting, however the latest guidance does allow the implementation of these safely back into settings.
Can peripatetic music tutors work across established bubbles?	Yes – however, they should minimise contact and maintain social distancing from other staff members and comply with the school's arrangements for managing and minimising risk.
Can peripatetic music tutors lead ensemble work from September?	Yes - Ensemble work can take place in school settings where this has been appropriately risk assessed and is subject to additional health and safety/social distancing measures. Unfortunately countywide Ensembles will not be able to recommence in the Autumn Term due to the ongoing concerns around gathering pupils from multiple settings across the county. Virtual opportunities for ensemble players will be offered from the Autumn term.

Norfolk Music Hub will instigate:

- Contact with all schools in readiness for September 2020 to understand the arrangements and needs of each setting
- Develop of Risk Assessment procedures to enable the safe return of peripatetic tutors in line with school arrangements
- Restart of weekly Individual Instrumental Tuition from 15 September 2020
- Offer a free digital WCET programme for the Autumn term
- Offer free digital ensemble opportunities for the Autumn term
